GW's Melvin Gelman Library serves not only University students and faculty, but researchers who come to the Washington area from every part of the world. Those interested in the unique history of Washington, D.C. benefit especially from Gelman's Washingtoniana holdings, located in the Department of Special Collections. The Washingtoniana group consists of extensive printed, manuscript and graphic resources documenting the cultural and political history of the Washington region.

Interspersed among the following pages of the report from President Trachtenberg are fifteen examples of Washingtoniana from the Gelman collection.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT

A new chapter in the book of GW history began unfolding June 22, 1990. At a site located some four miles east of Leesburg, Virginia, GW broke ground for the first classroom and laboratory building of our Northern Virginia Campus. Situated on a 576-acre tract overlooking the Potomac River, the newest GW building will occupy land upon which, not too many years ago, cattle placidly grazed. The ground-breaking symbolized the coming to fruition of a dream and a goal that began to take shape five years ago, when members of the Charles E. Smith Companies suggested to GW an innovative partnership between industry and higher education. When this process ultimately is completed, the GW campus will be the focal point of University Center, a research park that will marry business, research, and teaching for the benefit of science, industry, higher education – and society.

Thirty or forty years ago, the idea that an academic campus could be so interwoven with the needs of the business world and the greater community might have been greeted with actual horror. But, in the America of 1990, the idea not only makes sense, but perfect sense. And so does its site. Our Located in the heart of Foggy Bottom, just west of the White House and north of the State Department, the GW campus is at the center of research, teaching and planning in the nation's capital.

University has always benefited from its location in the nation's capital. Today, the Washington metropolitan area embraces much of suburban Maryland and Virginia as well as the District of Columbia. This new venture on which we have embarked thus seems highly appropriate and natural, and we look forward to watching its progress with interest and pride.

This process of setting goals and working toward their accomplishment is familiar to us all. In addition to our individual aspirations – which vary greatly from person to person – most of us share a sense of community with society as a whole. In this, we join with our neighbors in seeking to contribute to progress and amity in our communities, to encourage the continuation of economic prosperity, and – on a somewhat loftier plane – to foster the establishment of world harmony and peace.

Through direct participation in the work of The George Washington University, many of us have an opportunity to satisfy some of our personal and community objectives and, at the same time, to share a set of institutional goals as well. These can be summarized as follows:

- ◆ To deliver the highest quality educational opportunities to all our students – from the undergraduate liberal arts major to the graduate or professional school student;

- ◆ To provide our faculty and staff with the best resources possible to support that goal;
- ◆ To be a productive partner in the District of Columbia's quest to meet the challenges of an urban American city;
- ◆ To fulfill the obligations and to fully explore and use the opportunities created by our location in the nation's capital.

A look back at the past academic year – a year that encompassed the start of this century's final decade – creates an understandable need to “take stock.” How have we measured up during the year? Have we accomplished the goals that we have set for ourselves, individually and as a University? What are our aspirations and our prospects for the year – and the decade – ahead?

The principal ingredients of educational quality are simple and well known: bright, talented students and outstanding faculty and staff. GW is attracting growing numbers of both.

Over 60,000 alumni, nearly 50 percent of GW's living graduates, reside in the Greater Washington area.

THE STUDENTS

During the past year, our recruitment of high-quality students has resulted in an incoming class with 47 National Merit Finalists, more than twice as many as enrolled in GW the preceding year. And, while maintaining last year's twenty-point gain on average SAT scores (540 verbal, 590 math), we have increased from 27 percent to 32 percent the number of freshmen who rank in the top tenth of their high school class and from 49 percent to 56 percent the number who rank in the top fifth. This year 12 percent of the class have combined SAT scores of 1300 or higher.

Applications and enrollments continue to rise in many programs; for example, the School of Engineering and Applied Science for the second year in a row is showing a small but steady increase in undergraduate enrollment – a hopeful sign that may portend reversal of the national trend. The National Law Center had more than 7,000 applications for the 480 places in its entering class.

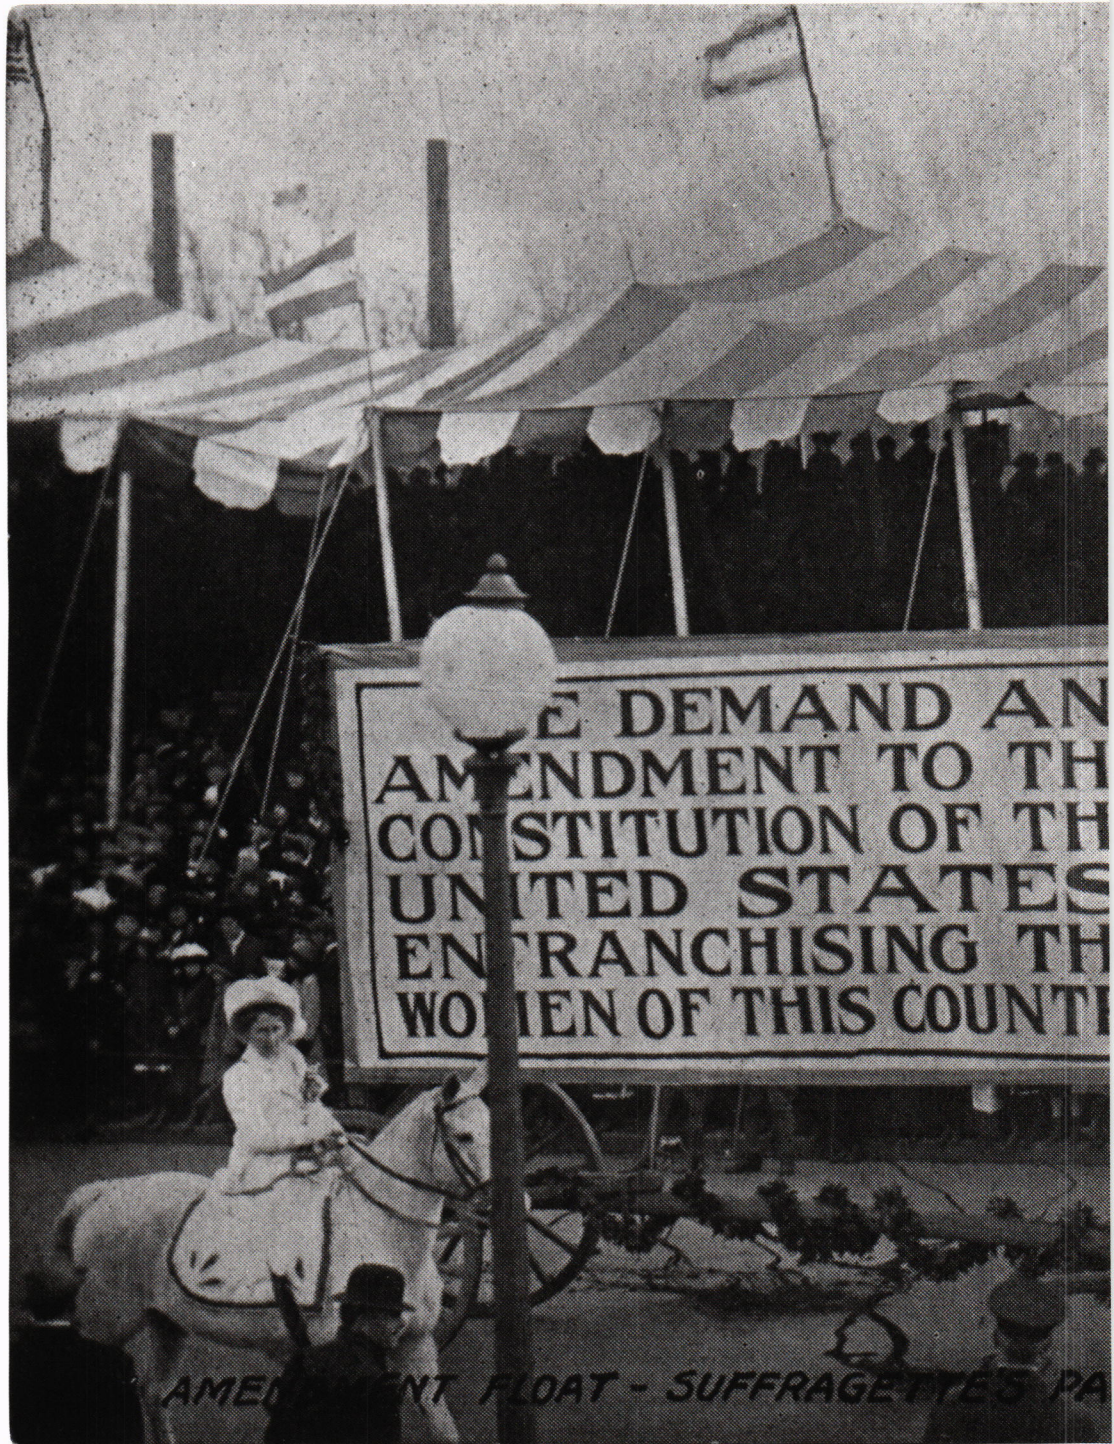

Some additional facts about the results of our 1989-90 admissions efforts may interest you. For example, in our entering freshman class, 41.7 percent will receive financial aid –

On March 3, 1913, 5,000 women marched down Pennsylvania Avenue to demand voting rights. The paraders were heckled en route; an altercation ensued, and cavalry troops stationed at Fort Myer were required to restore order. The following photographs originally appeared as postcards. In the first decades of the century, postcard sets depicting famous events and political themes were extremely popular.

Suffragette's Parade: "Start," March 3, 1913

Suffragette's Parade: "Amendment Float," March 3, 1913

among them many high-ability students who can especially enrich and be enriched by our academic strength. That number is up more than 6 percent from the previous year.

GW continues to attract impressive numbers of international students. In the fall of 1989, international student enrollment was 2,177, with 44 percent coming from Asia – in line with the widespread trend of increased representation from Asian countries. The five foreign countries with the most students at GW were Korea (246), Japan (183), Taiwan [ROC] (125), Saudi Arabia (113), and China (96). In domestic enrollment, the University showed significant increases in the number of students from a number of states, including Colorado, Louisiana, North Carolina, Washington, Indiana, Vermont, and Kentucky, representing real success in our strategy to build a more diversified student body.

And, when all those bright students from all over the world arrive in Washington, we have created another piece of good news to welcome them: telephone registration is a fact of life at last at GW! The new system, once and for all time, has changed the laborious and time consuming “bull pen” registration rite into a process as simple as pushing the buttons on a touch-tone phone.

The excellent results of our enhanced admissions drive are a compliment to all sectors of the campus community. The results strongly suggest that many first-rate students would like to attend GW if we can become more competitive in the area of financial aid with many of the other fine colleges and universities with whom we vie directly for these outstanding students.

These reports augur well for the future, but a moment's pause to reflect on the immediate past is indicated here. For, although it is impossible to mention individually all students of great accomplishment during 1989-90, some demand to be singled out. We point with pride to our five top undergraduate scholars, recipients of the Honors Convocation Distinguished Scholar Awards: Lauren J. Grika, School of Education and Human Development; Carl A. Lichvarcik, Jr., Elliott School of International Affairs; Stacey A. Mevorach, School of Government and Business Administration; Shahram Nakhostin, School of Engineering and Applied Science; and Suzanne E. Varholak, Columbian College of Arts and Sciences. Three students won George Washington Awards for making the University a better place to study and work: Andrew I. Alperstein, Matthew J. Budoff, and Mark J. Vane. Mark Chichester, president of the GW Black Peoples' Union, received the Martin Luther King, Jr., Medal for outstanding service in human rights. Finally, this year's Baer Awards for Excellence in Student Life went to Chris Crowley, Andy Flagel, Sena Kwawu, Eric Maclure, Elizabeth Seff, and Javid Sonde.

Competition and accomplishment in athletics also are hallmarks of university life. This year we took major steps toward enhancing that area of student experience in soccer, baseball and basketball. GW has inaugurated a new soccer and baseball home, Francis Field, at 25th and M streets. And we have installed a talented new basketball coach, Mike Jarvis, formerly coach at Boston University. Our intercollegiate sports picture thus continues to brighten.

THE FACULTY AND STAFF

At a time when the arts and sciences, historically the core of our universities, are often seen as the victims of a world much more concerned with high-tech (and the money needed to obtain it) than with the less "glamorous" liberal arts, the University has taken an important initiative toward strengthening arts and sciences programs at GW – the setting up of an Arts and Sciences Self-Study Committee, chaired by Vice President for Academic Affairs

During 1989-90, over 300 GW alumni worked on Capitol Hill as assistants to members of Congress, serving as administrative and legislative aides, press representatives and on committee staff.

The Gelman Library collections offer the researcher the opportunity to investigate the history of Washington business from a number of perspectives. Photographs on the following pages show Washington health inspectors at work in and around Center Market, 7th Street and Pennsylvania Avenue, circa 1911.

Roderick S. French. In his words: "The Arts and Sciences, together with the rest of the University – and indeed, along with the rest of higher education in America – are being forced to rethink the relationship between teaching and research. Every campus has a local history that significantly shapes this rethinking. At GW, certainly in the Arts and Sciences, we have a long, dominant history of being known as a very good teaching institution.

"However, during the last two decades, in some significant measure through Henry Solomon's leadership, we have recruited and encouraged a growing number of faculty who are deeply committed to the research enterprise in their respective fields.

"More recently, we have come under the leadership of a new President who simultaneously has done two things. First, he has vigorously affirmed the vocation of teaching and declared his intention to improve the quality of undergraduate liberal arts education at GW. Second, he has emphatically endorsed a policy designed to cultivate research excellence in selected fields and provided more support for research-oriented activities than ever before.

"We all agree that research and teaching are most often pitted against one another either by simpletons or by those who are friends of neither, but the important question is how best to organize the Arts and Sciences at the undergraduate and graduate levels so as to achieve that proper synergy between research and teaching to which we all subscribe.”

A synergetic relationship also connects GW faculty and staff with enterprise and scholarly endeavors throughout the city. Members of the GW community have professional affiliations with literally hundreds of Washington-area organizations in both the public and the private sectors. GW faculty work with NASA, the National Institutes of Health, the White House Office of Technology and Policy, the International Council for Small Business and the Smithsonian Institution, to name but a few.

During 1989-90, our four distinguished University Professors continued to make original contributions to their fields of inquiry – Peter Caws, philosophy; Marcus Cunliffe, American history; Amitai Etzioni, socioeconomics; and Seyyed H. Nasr, Islamic studies. It is with great sorrow that I must report to you the death of Dr. Cunliffe on September 2. The entire University community was saddened at the loss of this extraordinary colleague.

Vanderhoek, biological sciences; and Jennifer R. Wright, U.S.-German International Education Administrators Program. Professor Vanderhoek also was named a Fogarty Senior International Fellow, while two other Medical Center faculty members also received coveted awards: Rebecca D. Elon was named a Kellogg National Fellow, and Jeffrey M. Rosenstein received the Jacob Javits Neuroscience Investigator Award. Jay R. Shotel, associate dean of the School of Education and Human Development, received an American Council on Education fellowship. Finally, John H. Miller, chemistry, named a Winston Churchill Fellow by the English Speaking Union, will use the grant to help fund his sabbatical in Australia.

This was the year that the University's roster of endowed professorships took a major leap upward, in part as a result of the successful Campaign for George Washington. The number of endowed professorships now stands at 35. Vigorous recruitment efforts resulted in the appointment of the following distinguished scholars and teachers: William Baber, Benjamin Franklin Professor of Accountancy; Peter Budetti, Harold and Jane Hirsh Professor of Health Care Law; Ronald Palmer, Visiting E. R. Baker Professor of International Affairs; Stephen Saltzburg, Howery Professor of Trial Advocacy; Kenneth F. Schaffner, University Professor of Medical Humanities; and Lowell Weicker, 1989-90 Congressional Professor.

At the present time GW is home to twenty-nine institutes of research and study – ranging from the Joint Center for Advancement of Flight Sciences to the Institute for Sino-Soviet Studies to the National Health Policy Forum.

Among major research projects currently under way, a selected sample listed below may give you an idea of the range of GW expertise:

- ◆ Professor Don Lehman's cutting-edge research in nuclear physics, funded by the National Science Foundation and the Department of Energy, including his investigation of "the structure and electromagnetic interactions of few-body systems."
- ◆ Professor Nozer Singpurwalla's pioneering work on making computer systems more reliable, which builds upon his world reputation as a scholar in data-processing.
- ◆ Professor John Logsdon's current research, performed in coordination with the work of NASA, on the development of an Earth Science Data Policy – an international venture involving European, Japanese and Canadian space and meteorological agencies.

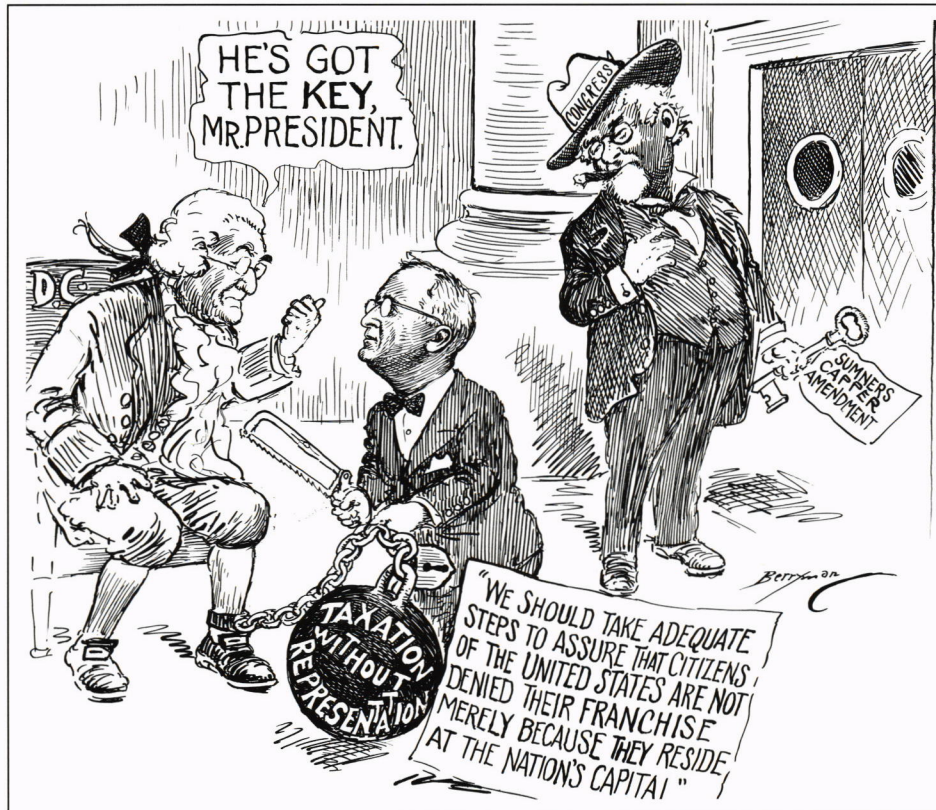

In the recently concluded 101st Congress, three United States senators and seven members of the House of Representatives were GW graduates.

Gelman's special collections include a number of original Clifford K. Berryman cartoons. Berryman (1869-1949) created numerous editorial cartoons for The Washington Post and The Washington Star. An advocate of voting rights for residents of the District of Columbia, Berryman is perhaps best remembered for popularizing the "Teddy" bear, named after President Theodore Roosevelt.

- ◆ Professor James Foley's widely recognized work in computer graphics, including his research on the development of a "knowledge-based advisory system for general scientific data visualization."
- ◆ Director Charlene Bickford's participation in the First Federal Congress Project, a series of books being produced that will provide hitherto unavailable documentation on how the First Federal Congress implemented the Constitution.
- ◆ Professor Jack Harrauld's timely and vital work on how information technology can be used optimally to plan and dispatch personnel and goods in major emergency situations.
- ◆ Professor Alison S. Brooks's excavation of Middle Stone Age Occupation Horizons at the Katanda Sites, Semliki Valley, Zaire, seeks to provide evidence of differential human activities over a range of localities in a Central African Paleo-landscape and should increase understanding of the role of African adaptations in human evolution during the early Upper Pleistocene.
- ◆ Professor Jerrold Post's work in the area of political psychology and his current research focuses on the effects of illness, disability, and age on leadership decision making and the effects of crisis-induced stress on decision making.

throughout the University is published elsewhere in this President's Report.

On a university-wide level to further support and recognize the contributions of our faculty, this year we provided merit-based pay raises to 150 of our colleagues – over and above the increases already received for the present academic year. Further individual recognition came from the various schools; for example, the National Law Center this year awarded eighteen summer research stipends to members of its faculty.

Numerous innovations in academic programs were planned and implemented during the past year, including the creation of the Center for Health Policy Research. The new Center is directed by Professor Peter P. Budetti, occupant of the Harold and Jane Hirsh Professorship of Health Care Law.

Among other programs of note are the National Law Center's expanded LL.M program in Environmental Law; the planned Soviet Executives Program of the School of Business and Public Management; and two Medical School programs – the Master of Public Health program, which after functioning for two years was granted full accreditation and has expanded to include tracks in epidemiology, occupational/environmental health, and administrative medicine; and our Department of ur University works hard to maintain and extend its long-standing tradition of responsiveness to the city of Washington's medical, legal, social, educational, and cultural needs. That tradition continues to the present moment, as we find The George Washington University Hospital at the forefront of establishing ways to assist in developing means to help solve the national health-care crisis. We also are proud to be working currently with the District of Columbia public school system, on several levels, to help devise solutions to the problems plaguing the nation's urban school systems. These partnerships include a pilot project to improve literacy, an intern mentor program, a clinical law program, and a science and engineering apprentice program – and many more, truly too numerous to enumerate.

Our bond with the federal city has made itself felt from the presidency of James Monroe to the presidency of George Bush. Even if I had the time to draw one up, my listing of the thousands of filaments connecting GW with the federal government and with Washington's international community would overflow all of the pages of this report. That is one of the reasons GW is proving such a magnet for students – graduate students as well as undergraduates – from so many parts of the nation and so many nations of the world. For the fact is, our Washington, D.C., connection is never more valuable than when it enables us to offer students the vast intellectual and cultural resources of the city – including our ability to help students gain internships in the federal government or at nationally known galleries and museums. Five of our students found summer jobs in the White House this year. The Washington connection is helpful to students through faculty access to the city's unique wealth of research facilities as well. And we all benefitted this spring, when GW's Charles E. Smith Center was chosen as headquarters for the international press corps covering the Bush-Gorbachev Summit. The entire George Washington University community had the opportunity to witness history being made, firsthand.

GW: AN INTERNATIONAL UNIVERSITY

I was honored by an invitation to visit South Korea in June to receive an honorary doctorate from Hanyang University in Seoul. My plane took off from National Airport at a time when South Korea's newfound economic power and political influence had become a topic for front-page discussion. I arrived in Seoul to find a major, fully functioning George Washington University Alumni Association, representing a remarkable number of South Korean citizens who hold degrees from GW. And what I discovered throughout South Korean society was a historical relationship with GW that led to, among other things, a very cordial meeting with Korea's President, Roh Tae Woo.

That my next trip on University business should have taken me to the United Kingdom – to a George Washington University Alumni Association meeting in London – helped drive the point home: Overseas our alumni hold jobs in fascinating offices all over the world, and our faculty are researching and studying the four corners of the earth as well as under the ocean and up in the stratosphere! Meanwhile, at home, we have a student body of such diverse national heritage and intellectual interest that – daily – GWTV provides for them and other interested viewers a cable system offering news broadcasts from France, Germany, Iran, Israel, Italy, Japan, Malaysia, Mexico, People's Republic of China, Poland, Soviet Union, Turkey, and the United Kingdom.

The fact that we have active alumni associations in Seoul and London provides a hint of our commitment to an increasingly vital alumni program. Initiatives are under way currently across the country – from New York to Seattle, from Boston to San Francisco – and areas targeted for the future include New Orleans, Phoenix, Providence, and Tokyo! East and West, North and South, GW is on the move.

Back home, interesting figures from all over the world addressed our students this year on the GW campus. Two who come to mind are Yuri Dubinin, former Soviet ambassador to the United States, and Aubrey Mokoena, a youth leader with the African National Congress. We gave equal time to American dignitaries, of course, and this year we were briefed by some particularly eloquent citizens – General Colin Powell, MBA '71, chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff; U.S. Senator George J. Mitchell, Senate Majority Leader; The Hon. L. Douglas Wilder,

Over 50,000 people visited the GW Medical Center's emergency room last year. Nearly $22 million in uncompensated care was provided by the University to D.C. residents.

Governor of Virginia; and The Hon. Anthony M. Kennedy, associate justice of the U.S. Supreme Court.

C O N C L U S I O N

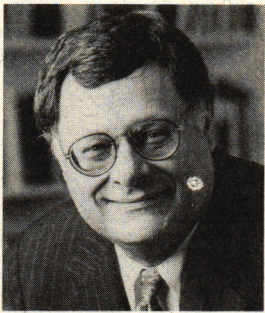

In totalling up the accomplishments of the year just concluded, one major “practical” area remains to be reported upon. University-wide, we have made major strides in introducing computers to enhance our efficiency and to enable us to “work smarter.” For example, new systems are up and running in the Registrar’s office, for registration planning and for student records retrieval; in the Personnel office, for development of databases for our insurance plans; and in the library, where the new ALADIN database system provides users with efficient access to the resources of the seven other universities in the Washington Research Library Consortium. Across the campus, many individual schools also have made notable improvements in their computerization. We have kept to our plan of putting on line each year a new computer classroom – the latest has Macintosh equipment. Also, the National Law Center has installed eighteen additional work stations in the new Jacob Burns computer room.

As I look back over the year, and over the accomplishments reported to you here, I confess that I am proudest of all that we are achieving so much while still, as this year's financial report makes clear, keeping our budget in the black. And I hasten to add that such "bottom-line" thinking is a necessity rather than a luxury where GW is concerned, because it is only by knowing that the University is conducting its fiscal affairs in a sound and responsible manner that students, students' families, individual donors, foundations, and government agencies can feel confident about GW's use of the money they are contributing to its budget.

To be able to weigh a year's debits and credits – in teaching, research, and administration as well as in finance – and to be able to say, "yes, it was a good year" is of course extremely rewarding. It is the "payoff" for all the hard work we invest in setting goals and working toward their realization. But we know all too well that in today's world, those who for even a minute rest on their laurels are apt to be left behind in a cloud of dust. These words seem to resonate particularly as I write them; internationally, troublesome portents abound while domestically, economic uncertainty seems rife.

Thus, I conclude my remarks to you with a pledge that GW is doing the necessary to be ready and set to keep moving forward in the volatile 1990s – with no intention of slackening its “full speed ahead” pace!

Universities traditionally have been under the dual obligation both to transmit the best of what is known to date and to contribute to the creation of new and/or more reliable knowledge. The primary agents of that double enterprise of education and research are of course the faculty. Increasingly in recent years, the faculty of our institution have demonstrated that it is indeed possible to sustain GW's longstanding commitment to excellence in teaching while attaining new levels of distinction in research as well. The range of the faculty's creative scholarship can also be read as a display of the wealth of fields of study available to our students; such is the reciprocity between research and teaching.

"Productivity" is a measure that must be applied subtly and differentially in academic life, but the bibliography that follows is prima facie evidence of the scholarly productivity of our faculty. Each faculty member was invited to submit the title of only one of his or her works done in the last year. Had we permitted them to turn in the full inventory of their works produced in that period, the roster that follows would have become a volume in itself. This record should be a source of pride to all members of the University and to its friends.

THE CAMPAIGN FOR GEORGE WASHINGTON

The

Washington University
WASHINGTON DC

THE CAMPAIGN FOR GEORGE WASHINGTON

Conclusion of the Campaign for George Washington on June 30, 1990, was a milestone in GW's financial development program. This campaign was the first comprehensive, University-wide fund-raising effort in GW's history. Its outstanding success not only has provided additional resources for academic programs but has helped establish a solid base of support for the future. The Campaign provided a vehicle for communicating the University's strengths, directions, and goals to individuals and organizations across the country. The result was a campaign that exceeded its goal and engendered a wider awareness and understanding of George Washington University.

While gifts to the Campaign totaled $9 million more than its overall goal of $75 million, these gifts did not address all of the specific sub-goals that were established. Some unmet needs remain, for example, additional endowed professorships and increased endowment for the University's libraries. Fund-raising efforts in the next year will focus on obtaining needed support in these areas as well as the ongoing Annual Fund, Reunion Gift, and Planned Giving programs. Future fund-raising efforts also will emphasize the needs of individual academic units, with the appointment of development officers and new volunteer boards and committees in the various colleges and schools.

The successful conclusion of one campaign leads naturally to a period of study and thought concerning the University's future needs. Establishment of the Medical Center Board of Advisors, Advisory Council, and Physician's Advisory Council over the past year represents an effort to increase the involvement of alumni and community friends in considering GW's future directions and in formulating new strategies for achievement of its goals in the 1990's and beyond. Similar efforts will be undertaken in all units of the University in the next two years.

As the academic year 1989-90 drew to a close, there were serious concerns about the condition of the national and Washington economies and, once again, worry about the effects of energy costs on future economic strength of the nation. In addition, possible new budget and tax legislation was under discussion by the Congress, with significant implications for philanthropy. Such factors will have an impact on voluntary support of GW as well as all colleges and universities. But history has demonstrated that institutions which define exciting goals and demonstrate their effectiveness in employing new resources will be rewarded with continuing support.

Through their support of the Campaign for George Washington, GW's friends and benefactors have demonstrated both their commitment and confidence in the future of the university. As we pause to celebrate the Campaign's success, we also look ahead optimistically to new challenges and opportunities.

THE LUTHER RICE SOCIETY

SHELDON S. COHEN, BA '50, JD '52, CHAIRMAN

uther Rice was preeminent among the founders of the George Washington University. The Luther Rice Society was organized in 1968 to perpetuate the memory and ideals of Luther Rice and to give proper recognition to all those who have continued to give exceptional financial support to the University. To provide for such recognition, those who give or pledge gifts of $10,000 or more are granted life-time membership in one of four associates categories. Annual membership is extended to contributors of $1,000 or more.

The George Washington University is deeply indebted to the members of the Luther Rice Society for their leadership and for the high standards they have set for all alumni and friends of the University. Their generosity ensures the University's continued growth and development.

GW: AT THE CROSSROADS OF WASHINGTON

The 1990 President's Report was produced by the Office of University Relations, The George Washington University. The report was edited by Robert Guldin and Sandy Holland, and designed by Frank Glickman Inc. Special thanks are due William B. Keller, head of the Gelman Library's Special Collections Department, and Francine Zorn Trachtenberg for their invaluable editorial and artistic contributions to this project.
